and so result advantageously to the public. Second, that the decreased expense of bringing coal into the markets of the State might decrease its cost to the consumer, but, adds the Governor whether the combination or the consumer would get the benefit is an open question.

The Governor further says that he is satisfied there was no intention under the bill to increase the cost of coal in New Jersey, what ever might be the effect elsewhere. Even if ever might be the effect elsewhere. Even if there was, the bill protected the public, as it provided for amendment or repeat.

This, however, might necessitate the calling of the legislature in extra session, and he would not care to leave legislation in such a shape. It would give rise to various embarrassments and expenses.

By the law of New Jersey, the Governor has not the power to technically veto a bill after the Legislature has adjourned. If he does not approve it, he can file it with the State librarian within thirty days after adjournment, accompanied by a memorandom stating that his signature is withheld.

the till is then classed as a legislative failure.

The effect of such a course is to all intents and purposes the same as that of a veto. The bill is dead, and can only be revived by a subsequent Legislature.

The veto had been so generally anticipated

The veto had been so generally anticipated that Wall street operators had practically discounted its effects, and the announcement that the bill had falled caused no sensation whatever on the street.

Reading opened at 55, and on large transactions fell off to 54%. It railled to 55% on reports from the London market.

Immediately after the announcement of Gov. Abbett's action the stock was sold in large blocks, advancing to 55%, subsequently dropping on realization sales to 55%.

The bill legalizing the coal transpertation combination between the New Jersey Central, the Lohigh Valley and the Philadelphia and Reading railroad companies, which was passed by the New Jersey Legislature during the closing hours of the last session, March 11, and has ever since been in the hands of Gov. Abbett, has aroused more general discussion and heated argument than any public measure which has ever come before that body in recent years.

The Coal Trust, which was virtually established by what is known as the Reading deal, has been generally regarded by the people as a serious menace to the public wellare, because it created a practical monopoly in the coal trade and enabled the members of the pool, which was formed by private contract, to control absolutely the market for one of the most important necessaries of life.

The fight which was made in the New Jersey Legislature over the bill legalizing the deal was bitter and persistent. Find action was delayed until the close of the session, and when the bill was at length passed by the Assembly there was a scene of the greatest excitement.

The other races yexterday were not very interesting. There were no close fibishes, for the events were won in decided style. Brovier, who opened second choice and receded to 7 to 1, won very easily. Hueston rode him, and it may be as well to say here that this lad is riding in good form. He rides holestly also, and one may be sure of getting a ride for his money. Patrick, a 30 to I slock, was second, and Miss Fox third.
